Neolamprologus crassus Neolamprologus crassus, the broadhead cichlid, is a species of cichlid from the African Great Lakes. This species is known to form symbiotic relationships with helminths. Description Neolamprologus crassus is one of the most elongated cichlids in existence and has a body length of approximately with a maximum length of about. The elongated shape of the body is very useful for their ability to use helminths. The mouth has a median papilla on its upper lip. The dorsal fin is a hare-like structure with 24-26 soft rays with a spinous dorsal fin. The basic color of the body is a dark green to black, with a medium-sized black spot at the center of the dorsal fin and a black spot at the tip of the caudal fin. The sides of the body have a metallic green to blue coloration and the abdomen is a bright yellow to orange. As an addition to the already elongated body, the species also has a large, flat caudal fin. Habitat The natural habitat of Neolamprologus crassus is in shallow waters near the shoreline where there is a lot of vegetation. This species lives in areas that have abundant vegetation such as grasses and reeds. Since they live in shallow waters, it can be found in areas near the shore and near a river system. They can be found in areas of low conductivity, such as swamps and shallow ponds. In an area near the city of Kampala, Uganda, the species has also been observed in seagrass meadows. Diet Neolamprologus crassus primarily feeds on zooplankton, small invertebrates, and fish. The diet of this species is similar to the diet of its cohabitating organisms, except for the fact that the host will eat its own eggs and fry. This in turn allows the host's parasites to develop and mature within the host. Hosts and Diseases Hosts of Neolamprologus crassus include the cohabitating fish hosts, the tilapia (Oreochromis spp.), the cichlid (Tylochromis polyorchis), and the tilapia (O. mossambicus

The FDG uptake was measured in terms of the tumor-to-lesion ratio (TLR) and lesion-to-liver (L/L) ratio. In addition, the image fusion results were compared with the results of CT. The mean TLR for PET-CT was lower than that for PET-MRI (3.2 ± 2.3 and 7.0 ± 5.1 , respectively, p Q: Animated render fails when the render() function is executed An animated render is not working when the render() function is executed, it does work if it is executed outside of the render function.
