As a result of the game-changing technology, players will have new ways to score, create and attack the ball to make you better at FIFA. It will also create an illusion of more challenging gameplay and it will feel more real than ever. The improvements are noticeable right away. To begin, I tested FIFA 22 against the same FIFA 21 gameplay I've become accustomed to. But as soon as I kicked the ball, the physics of the ball were completely different. The speed and trajectory of the ball felt different, as did the "realism" of how the ball was kicked. It wasn't hard to tell that the ball was altered to feel more realistic. Unfortunately, it was difficult to test out all of the other game modes and features. But one thing stood out, a motion capture button on the controller that reads "HyperMotion," and lets players "chase, shoot, dribble and tackle the ball more easily. Although it might be nice to not have to chase down the ball and physically hold the control stick like I previously needed to do, it's not hard to notice the effects that the game's new physics engine has on gameplay. FIFA 20 Ultimate Team Builds FIFA 22 introduces a "Player Creator" and "Ultimate Team" mode that I tested with three random fictional players. In Player Creator, my first step was to create a "Player Creator". The "Player Creator" is a user interface in the middle of the game to let you create a customizable player using real-life players. To create a "Player Creator," you simply choose your player type and choose how you want to play them; for example: Offensive, Defensive, Central Midfielder, or Wide Midfielder. After that, you put together a team of a size that you want. Then you customize the five attributes of the players (skill, pace, strength, workrate, creativity). You can “influence” the five attributes using a “influence meter” to create a custom player. Then I chose which players I wanted to play with in my team. Finally, the “Player Creator” created a team using the FIFA players in my real-life Ultimate Team. As you
