Q: The usage of "Where" in this sentence Can I replace "where" in the following sentence? or this is idiomatic expression? "The process of cooking is heating in general; and the heating process is heating where water is necessarily present." A: Yes, you can, though my impression is that your question is more than just a matter of replacing where with any other word; rather, you would rather revise the sentence to make it easier to read/understand in its entirety. The grammatical structure of the sentence is as you have written it, though for readability I would rearrange the subject and predicate to "cooking" and "heating" and then rewrite that subject-verb-adverb-subject structure using "where" to relate "water" to the verb. That gives me: The process of cooking is heating in general; and heating where water is necessarily present is heating. I imagine that if you do that, that will help with the layering of meaning suggested by you in your original sentence. Bacterial iron-reducing organisms (also referred to as microorganisms) include a wide variety of bacteria generically referred to as "cyanobacteria" or "blue-green algae". Cyanobacteria are particularly suitable for use as a biocompatible, photosynthetic material (biofuels) due to their natural ability to fix carbon dioxide into organic molecules. Cyanobacteria may also be effectively utilized to decontaminate polluted water by photooxidation (e.g., through photochemical reactions). Unfortunately, cyanobacteria are in low abundance in pristine locations relative to most other life on earth. Further, cyanobacteria are typically extremely sensitive to changes in environmental conditions which may dramatically impact their growth. For example, temperatures outside of a narrow range may have little or no impact on the growth of cyanobacteria, whereas flooding or sudden reduction in water levels may entirely kill the organisms. Additionally, many of these organisms are

(a ebay store) in a small box with the understanding that you can have the armor set without the weapons. The weapons look fantastic, MUCH better than any other armor set I've ever bought. Her artwork on the mcihira is also very cool. Just one problem though- where are the swords? SanDavJaguar wrote: I've got the purple blades, don't know where I got it, man. You could try ebay or another friendly site that doesn't cost a fortune. It's clear the weapons were bought by a vendor who liked them very much. How was the set? Best set of Samurai sets I own? It's clear the weapons were bought by a vendor who liked them very much. How was the set? Best set of Samurai sets I own? Just a Wicca and Shelly for women, Samurai Warrior for women and general diety-themed sets, Rogue Knight for generic evil knights. For a pack of shinobi-like ninja/red torch guys, there's an Ah-mi-i-cate-Goron set, a Pride/Pride of Infinity set, SanDavJaguar's set and a set of misc. Different colors. I've also got a later set with identical looking looking armor as this set. It's a tad bit cleaner and has the nice brushwork. It has the same traditional checkered armor of the men's set though. All in all, I'm trying to decide which set to get as a second dagger set. I'll probably try to make up some suitable blood hieroglyphical tattoos, that's where the interest is in the first place. "Briar Rose is far more than a place, though. From it bloom seeds that nourish all places. For they are the children of Briar Rose, raised on its essence." -Be blessed: Bringer of the Lake: Part III. (I.E.: Hyrule: Major Wind Waker Connection.) my set has a sword, but the sword looks, to me like it is not a sword. It looks like it has been cut out and
