Q: Meaning of 'better or worse' It is used here as follows: You should watch those results before telling yourself that the market is better or worse than a trade. Is the above sentence correct? My question is about "better or worse than" - as these two words mean essentially the same thing. Should it have been two different sentences? A: The meaning of Better is "greater than" but the meaning of Worse is "lesser than". Therefore, read the sentence as "You should watch those results before telling yourself that The market is better than a trade" or "You should watch those results before telling yourself that

To enjoy this website fully, you will need a modern browser, a fast internet connection, and a fairly new copy of Photoshop. As a PSD designer, I spent a lot of time creating the site, but I'm no expert on making graphic design websites. If you have any problems with the site, please let me know. Print-ready: I'm going to work on adding more content as the years go on, and the site shouldn't be completely accurate after several years (I don't anticipate there being any major version upgrades)
