During the month of February 2013, we received a palm tree from a friend of mine who was moving house. They had cut down their palm tree in their garden and had to transport it to their new home. I know many of you also know of old pale trees and so they were asking for your help to find a suitable replacement for their palm tree. Actually, I did not know any palm trees before, but I was personally intrigued by the unusual shape of this one. It was in a bad state of repair and we cut it down in December, but of course the roots were still intact. Our objective was to cultivate a new one and transplant it in our garden. The first cut was made on 26th December and after that we waited and waited for the weather to be stable and clear. We started off with cleaning the old tree, but the root system was very big and we had to cut a big patch to clean the old roots away. The palm tree was also a very old one as compared to new ones. We cut it with a machete and got rid of some of the leaves to make the plant healthy. After the cleaning of roots we planted the healthy trunk and small roots. We didn't expect to have a problem with growth as the palm trees in our area are very very robust. We started watering it, but then we got a lot of rot in the wood and the plant became very sick. So we took some good care of it, but we did not expect what to happen afterwards. After four months of continuously
