Underwater macrofauna diversity and community structure in the Molucca Sea and its temporal variability. The Molucca Sea, the easternmost province of the Arafura Sea (Northern Australia), has not been surveyed for macrofauna species richness and community structure in any detail. Recently, however, tools for sampling such communities have been developed and we have made preliminary data available. Sampling was done by diving on two transects (north and south) with a 25cm deep rope, one in the rainy season of 2000 and the other in the dry season of 2001 at four sites of the coast of the Molucca Sea: offshore south of Makassar, on the continental shelf offshore Pare Pare, and on the continental shelf between Pare Pare and Ambon Islands. The overall macrofauna species diversity of the present study was high: 172 species, with a total number of 85,204 specimens. The majority of the species were invertebrates (83.3%), among them isopods (79.6%) and polychaetes (46.3%). The lower species diversity was found in the continental shelf and offshore south of Makassar. The species composition of the community was highly variable between sites, seasons and years, as well as between life zones and habitats. In the wet season, the continental shelf sites offshore north and south of Makassar were dominated by large organisms (i.e. fishes, megafauna and other organisms of size >10cm). In the dry season, the offshore sites were dominated
